QUICK RESPONSE IS KEY

When it comes to salvaging photographs that have been damaged by water, sooner is always better. Mold and mildew will start to form on damp records within 48 hours. The best way to inhibit the growth of mold and mildew is to reduce humidity. Increase air flow with fans, open windows Cheap Scott Darling Hoodie , use air conditioners and dehumidifiers. Moderate light exposure (such as open shades, or leaving the basement lights on) can also reduce mold and mildew.

PHOTOGRAPHS AND NEGATIVES

Do not attempt to pull apart photographs or negatives that have stuck together. Soak them in clean water until they separate on their own. Rinsing and drying can take quite a while. Newer photographs can be temporarily stored in a bucket of cold clean water until you have time to work with them. Keeping them wet prevents mildew growth because mildew can only grow on damp material, not wet. Freezing is another option for temporary storage, but should not be used with photographs that are over 50 years old. For older photographs, electronic restoration is your best option.

Rinse them in more clean water as you go. Be careful not touch the emulstion (image) side of the print while it's wet. There are two acceptable drying methods: spread out face up on a clean, dry Cheap Elias Lindholm Hoodie , smooth surface or hanging on indoor lines with clothespins. The first method requires more space, but is gentler to your photos.

COMPUTER DISKS AND TAPES
